■ Selection of Breaks Gameplay elements taken from cult melodies such as piano and harp are woven into this new genre, where the player's on-screen character breaks the fourth wall in a humorous and unique way. ■ Both Solo and Band Play Cruel Bands features two kinds of gameplay: Solo and Band. Solo play is a one on one scenario where the player controls only one character. In Band play, up to three different characters and on-screen elements work together on a rhythm sheet with three tracklines. ■ Ridiculously High Cut-in Frequency After exactly 32x the rhythm of the song is sung, the player presses "Back" on the game controller and while holding it down, the player presses the "On" button to begin the game. The rhythm shown on the game controller is always exactly half of the rhythm sheet. ■ BANG-O: Adjustable Rhythm Timing Players can adjust the rhythm timing with the touchscreen. Touch the rhythm element to start, and as the song continues, the timing of the rhythm element will change. ■ Selectable Characters You can select a character to experience solo play. Each character has a powerful attack and a special ability. You can use special attacks and moves as you see fit. On the game controller, there are four face buttons for special moves. ■ Cut-in Genre The Cut-in genre is a genre which has its own unique mechanics. While listening to a song, the player will see game elements appear on-screen to break the fourth wall. ■ Enhanced Characters Thanks to the enhanced characters, the player can enjoy a greater sense of involvement in the game. ■ Elements Unique to Cut-in Games While the player is listening to the song, key elements are displayed on the screen. The elements that appear do not break the fourth wall, but the timing of their appearance closely follows the rhythm of the song. ■ Cut-in Approach The player's response is important. Respond quickly with a finger press, and the elements will appear on-screen. Do not respond too slowly, and the rhythm of the elements will be lost. ■ Jumping Cut-in Generation The "Jump" generation type allows the player to know exactly when an element will appear, but the timing is volatile. The more the player listens to the song, the faster the rhythm of the elements will get. ■ Horror Score A unique score which is

Of the 99 bands in existence, 15 of them were British. One of these is Crucial Band. As with all hobby bands, there's no "best" band. Crucial Band, for all intents and purposes, is about as good as they come. No setlist has EVER left me disappointed. Had I known before hand that this band exists I would have been THRILLED to see them. Some background, Crucial Band is a hobby band based in Manchester, in north England. They have been going for a very long time, and they have accrued a huge fan following in the last few years. They've had a strong line-up and crucially are quite well known across the British scene. (For the record, they are NOT a heavy music band.) I wrote to Crucial Band asking for an interview. They kindly agreed. I asked each member of the band to give me a 4-6 minute interview. They chose what they wanted to talk about, they answered my questions. Crucial Band no longer play gigs. The lead singer (Craig Brown) has flown the nest to move into song writing and acoustic gigs, leaving the rest to move on. You can download or listen to the interviews here: I didn't realise before hand that they have a small studio, so for anyone with an interest in the technical side of music they have released this catalog of past performances. Roughly 900 minutes of sound, spanning between 4 and 18 Jul 1995. There's a total of 8 DVDs. 100% of Crucial Band's recorded material is within this set. Three songs were not originally released, and these were eventually released elsewhere. You can find a listing of all of the 4 CD albums and 36 VHS/DVD albums here (as of 13 Dec 2001):
