Watch on YouTube The technology will allow players to navigate their virtual environment based on their real-life movement on the pitch. To help players integrate the new functionality into the game, a number of animations have been created to provide a smooth transition to real-life movements, including a jittery and stutter-y animation when players aren't as fast as real-life players are on the pitch. "The unique integration of player behavior from real-life into FIFA allows us to create and deliver an authentic, fully integrated experience for our players," said PES Global Brand Director Carlos Malcorra. "Based on the unique behaviour that occurs in the real world, players' real-life movement on and off the ball will come to life in-game, providing for a tremendous level of player immersion and excitement for our fans." FIFA and Pro Evolution Soccer have been two of the most
