The analysis, which looked at the data recorded by the website Topsy.com (formerly LiveSites), was published by the Canadian Taxpayers Federation this morning. "Though rarely noticed, the volume of comments on social media is a key metric of public opinion on government policy and events," says the report, which looked at the Twitter and Facebook profiles of every Ontarian. "What is remarkable about the avalanche of traffic to Kathleen Wynne's proposed legislation in the legislature is the large increase in social media traffic to the legislation during the week the legislation was introduced, compared to the week before. The steep spike coincides with the passage of the government bill and the forceful pushback from the public." The site records on a daily basis all tweets and tweets containing links to a particular website. Topsy says it measures when each tweet is "fired" and records a date for each tweet. T-shirts and other items were already available in the
