Q: How is the Priority Queue implemented I am currently learning about the Priority Queue data structure in Java. I have had a look at the following link - How is a Priority Queue implementation in java. However it doesn't explain in detail how a Priority queue works. I am a bit confused about the following - Is the priority queue a linked list? Is the comparing done in $O(1)$ in the linked list version? Is the PriorityQueue class inherited from the Queue class? What is the difference between the PriorityQueue and PriorityBlockingQueue class? If the priority queue is implemented as a linked list, does that mean its using two lists? Thanks in advance A: It's not a linked list. It's an array, so its complexity is the array's complexity. It should be $O(1)$. It's a class. It's already implemented on top of a queue. It's a subclass of the Queue class. (There's no "PriorityQueue" class.) Links: PriorityQueue, Queue How is a Priority Queue implemented? Obviously, an array of objects with a sorting method is used. Edit: The documentation is here. It says it's an array. It says it's $O(1)$.
