of the West Red Star Raider of the West is a 1957 American Western film starring Audie Murphy and directed by Joseph Pevney. The screenplay was written by Robert Leslie and Robert C. Dennis and was adapted by Robert Leslie and Robert C. Dennis from the novel The Far Country by Gary Paulsen. Produced by Allied Artists Pictures, it was the last movie to be made at their Roaring Creek Ranch location in Malibu. Plot Sergeant Jeremy Ford of the U.S. Army is captured by the Japanese army while attempting to uncover their scout camp on Nakoma Mountain. Ford manages to escape and eventually escapes into New Mexico Territory via Flagstaff, Arizona, and becomes an Apache scout for the Army's 7th Apache Scout Regiment stationed at Fort Apache. The Apache Chief, Cochise agrees to lead the 7th Apache Scout Regiment to attack a six-squadron mob of Mexican bandits near Happy Creek, New Mexico. Midway during the attack, due to a misunderstanding, Apache Scouts open fire on the help of civilians who were evacuating the bandits, killing two women and a child. Disbelieving what the Apache Scouts have done, Cochise, along with two of his warriors is shot by an Apache scout, and the Mexicans are relieved of their women and children. In the confusion, an Apache scout comes out as a surrendering white man, Jeremy Ford. He agrees to take the civilians to Fort Apache and then races back to attack the next band of Mexican raiders. However, this time the civilian convoy with Ford has reached the Apache camp. Ford is ignorant of the White Man's distrust of Indians and believes that the Apaches working for the Army are the same as the bandit raiders of the area. As he leaves the camp, Ford encounters Cochise's women, Tia Chavez and her sister Laika, who are also traveling into the war zone to get revenge for the dead soldiers. The morning after the fight, Cochise recognizes Ford as the white man who wounded him at the battlefield. He and his warriors kidnap Ford and bring him back to their camp. At the camp, they inform Ford of what has happened to his scout unit and tell him that they have been working for the army since escaping from the Massacres where they had been enslaved as prisoners. Cochise tells Ford that he and his warrior become their friends and companions. As they lay down to sleep, they are wakened by a twig snapping and an arrow is
