Case 2. The same growth rates as the average from 2000 to 2005. The P / E coefficient of the company is 6.6. Thus, the profit of 2005e is $ 2.03. Thus, the price of one share. Thus, the R / E coefficient is 25.4. This price of one share is below the price, on which the company can sell it. In other words, the company offers shareholders a much lower price than, according to analysts, it could offer. This is exactly what allows the company to maintain a high value of shares. When the company's shares are lower than they, in the opinion of analysts, can cost, the company owners have an incentive to increase revenue, paying higher than expected, profit. dd2bc28256
