years postoperatively. Additionally, a third case of a 6 mm diameter sutureless stem with a matched textured femoral component was recently published [1]. Our case is unique because it shows the results with an uncemented stem in the early postoperative period with a good clinical and radiographic outcome at a minimum of 5 years after the initial surgery. Although the femur is thought to be especially prone to osteolysis because of its thinness and low bone mass, no case of a large diameter sutureless stem has been previously described with radiologic signs of osteolysis 5 years after implantation. The purpose of this case report is to stimulate further research about the potential benefit of the sutureless stem, particularly with respect to the longevity of the stem.
Conflicts of Interest ===== The authors declare that there are no conflicts of interest regarding the publication of this article. [Coronal and sagittal view of the
